One dead, one critical in latest foster care fiasco

DCF. Two toddlers were taken from an Auburn home, one did not survive.

One toddler is dead and another is in critical condition after they were taken from a foster home on Pheasant Court in Auburn, the latest in a long string of problems for the Department of Children and Families.

Authorities spent Sunday determining the cause of death to one girl and the injuries to the other girl. Authorities released no information regarding the circumstances of the tragedy as of Sunday evening.

In total, six children lived in the house, three of which were in foster care programs. Pheasant Court is an affordable housing neighborhood in the quiet town.

DCF spokeswoman Andrea Grossman said that the agency is conducting its own investigation and is "actively working with law enforcement and medical personnel."

Neighbors told The Globe that they saw paramedics running out of the house at about 1 p.m. on Saturday afternoon with two young girls. A woman was seen following them in a state of hysterics.

The Worcester Telegram reported that the mother, Kim Malpass, lived in the state-subsidized apartment. Neighbors described her as a good mother who provided for the children under her care.

Number of additional social workers needed to supplement the 3,000 already on the job, according to their union.

DCF social workers called upon the Massachusetts Senate for reform after they said caseloads have spiked an unmanageable level after the disappearance and death of Jeremiah Oliver, a 5-year-old boy in the DCF system who was reported missing in December 2014 and was found stuffed in luggage off of I-90 near Sterling.

As a result, three DCF employees were fired once it was revealed that Oliver went missing and that the social worker assigned to his case hadn't visited his family since April. Former Department of Children and Families Commissioner Olga Roche stepped down in the wake of Oliver's death. A review found that social workers failed to make required family visits and properly report on DCF's contact with Oliver's family.

But 2014 was a bad year for kids under DCF care.

One-month-old Aliana Lavigne was found dead in a Grafton apartment in April 2014, two days after social workers found a week-old fax from Grafton police. Another infant, 2-week old Bailey Irish, also died in April 2014 after her family missed a scheduled DCF visit the day before.

Earlier this month, a 7-year-old Hardwick boy fell into a coma from apparent starvation and dehydration after it was revealed that the DCF worker in charge of his case was operating without a license.

SEIU 509 spokesman Jason Stephany told Metro there are about 3,000 social workers in the field, but an additional 375 are needed.

Massachusetts Gov. Charlie Baker's press secretary released a statement:

"Gov. Baker is deeply saddened to learn of this tragic situation and is in constant communication with leadership at DCF and public safety about their ongoing investigation."

The Worcester County District Attorney's office was unavailable for comment on Sunday.

Hub heat wave

While many Bay State residents are lamenting the Old Farmer's Almanac's prediction of another vicious winter, those who live in or closer to the moment should take note of how hot it's about to get.

The National Weather Service predicts scorchers for today and Tuesday. Wednesday onward won't exactly be a relief from the heat, with the remaining days seeing highs in the upper 80s.

According to the National Weather service, heat waves kill more people in America annually than any other extreme weather event.

City officials advise that vulnerable people seek air conditioning and that folks call 911 at the first sign of heat stroke.

TOM FOREMAN

TOM FOREMAN IS A CNN CORRESPONDENT AND AUTHOR OF THE UPCOMING BOOK "MY YEAR OF RUNNING DANGEROUSLY."

If you are a guy who carves life-size cattle out of butter, a woman who owns a whopping great rabbit or a politician trying to become president of the United States, this is your time: The Iowa State Fair is open for business. Every four years, this midwest Burning Man of pork chops, funnel cakes and animal husbandry becomes the gauntlet through which White House aspirants must run, and it is the setting for my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. GETTING PIGGY WITH IT: More than a million people attend the fair, and some of the top candidates were there this past weekend for some baby kissing and a turn on the infamous "soap box" where heckling is almost de rigueur (especially if you use words like de rigueur). Expect more contenders to drop in as the next two weeks go by, and with luck we may see one of the gaffes that have helped make the fair famous. Fred Thompson in his city slicker loafers. Mitt Romney declaring corporations are people. Personally, I'd love to see Bernie Sanders take the stage with Def Leppard.

2. BUMPER CARS: All the numbers say Hillary Clinton still has a likely lock on the Democratic nomination, but some stumbles on her part have triggered the latest game on the Midway — guessing who might be able to push her aside. The aforementioned Sen. Sanders is getting some oomph from the Left. Martin O'Malley keeps waving his arms like a juggler. And while Al Gore denies any interest, watch speculation this week over the idea of Joe Biden giving it a whirl.

3. SIDESHOW: And Donald Trump has been called for jury duty. He reports Monday. My prediction is that the judge will quickly dismiss him, but Trump will stick around to offer his opinion anyway. It's only fair.

Plane crashes in remote Indonesian region, 54 people on board

Passengers. There was no immediate word on whether anyone survived.

An aircraft with 54 people on board crashed in Indonesia's remote and mountainous region of Papua on Sunday, a government official said, the latest in a string of aviation disasters in the Southeast Asian nation.

"The latest information is that the Trigana aircraft that lost contact has been found at Camp 3, Ok Bape district in the Bintang Mountains reGENCY," Air Transportation Director General Suprasetyo said.

Earlier, the National Search and Rescue Agency said a twin-turboprop plane had lost contact with air traffic control as it flew over the forested area of eastern Indonesia but efforts to trace it were difficult because of failing light.

Trigana Air Operations Director Beni Sumaryanto said that within 30 minutes of hearing that the aircraft was missing, the airline sent another plane to scour the same flight path but it had found nothing because of bad weather, local media reported.

According to the official

BASARNAS Twitter account, the aircraft, a short-haul ATR 42-300 airliner belonging to Trigana Air Service and built in France and Italy, was carrying 44 adult passengers, five crew and five children and infants.

The plane was flying between Jayapura's Sentani Airport and Oksibil, due south of Jayapura, the capital of Papua province.

Five things you need to know

Trump says he would raise visa fees to pay for border walls

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump would increase fees on some Mexican visas and all border crossing cards as part of a broader plan to force Mexico to pay for a wall along the southern U.S. border.

Trump has made immigration a central plank of his campaign. On NBC's "Meet the Press," he said he would deport all undocumented immigrants and rescind President Barack Obama's executive orders on immigration.

The orders, if enacted, could protect as many as 5 million undocumented immigrants from deportation.

In a policy paper issued on Sunday, Trump said he would increase fees on temporary visas for Mexican chief executives, diplomats and North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) workers if Mexico does not agree to pay for the wall.

The NAFTA agreement of 1994 eliminated most tariff and other barriers to free trade and investment between the United States, Canada and Mexico. It permits the temporary cross-border movement of business travelers within the region.

Trump said he would also impound all remittance payments derived from illegal wages and increase fees at ports of entry from Mexico. Foreign aid cuts and tariffs would also be considered. REUTERS

US, Germany to pull Patriot missiles from Turkey

The United States and Germany said they will pull Patriot missile batteries from southern Turkey after a reassessment of the threats stemming from the conflict in neighboring Syria.

The U.S. Patriots, in Turkey as part of a broader NATO mission since 2013, will be re-deployed to the United States for upgrades, according to a joint Turkish-U.S. statement on Sunday.

German Defense Minister Ursula von der Leyen announced at the weekend that Berlin would let its three-year Patriot mission lapse in January instead of seeking parliamentary approval to extend it.

US military cancels hearing for 9/11 suspects

The U.S. military has canceled a pretrial hearing for suspects in the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks, a military spokesman said on Sunday, in another setback for the government in its efforts to try the five men being held at Guantanamo.

A defense department spokesman said the hearing, originally scheduled for Aug. 24 to Sept. 4, was canceled by the military judge.

"The judge cited issues that remain unresolved with regard to a claimed defense counsel conflict of interest," said Commander Gary Ross.

News of the cancellation was first reported by ABC News.

Bird flu aftershocks to drive turkey, egg prices up

Limited supplies of baby poultry and barn space to house them will hamper U.S. farmers' efforts to rebuild ravaged egg supplies after the nation's worst-ever outbreak of bird flu.

As a result of the shortages and the loss of more than 48 million chickens and turkeys to the disease, egg prices will climb higher than previously expected this year, according to estimates from the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Frozen wholesale turkey prices are expected to be up to 19 percent higher for the key Thanksgiving holiday than they were a year ago.

Rescuers work to clear China blast site of chemicals

Chinese soldiers and rescue workers in gas masks and hazard suits searched for toxic materials in China's port of Tianjin on Sunday as Premier Li Keqiang arrived to offer condolences, days after explosions flattened part of a national development zone.

The goal is to clear the chemicals before any rain falls, which could create further toxic gas.

The death toll rose to 112 from Wednesday's disaster, which sent massive yellow and orange fireballs into the sky, hurled burning debris across a vast industrial area, crumpled cars and shipping containers, burnt out buildings and shattered windows of nearby apartments.

The number of missing rose to 95, most of them fire fighters, state media said, suggesting the toll would rise significantly. More than 720 people remained in the hospital.

Officials acknowledged the presence of toxins but said they posed no risk to people outside a two-km evacuation zone surrounding the blast area.

"I can responsibly say that there will be no secondary damage to the people," Shi Luze, the chief of staff of the People's Liberation Army's Beijing Military Region, told reporters, referring to people outside the zone.

Shi confirmed the presence of more than 100 tons of deadly sodium cyanide, stored at two separate sites. He said workers were trying to clear the area of chemicals before possible rain showers, which could create toxic gas. REUTERS

More US colleges drop standardized tests

Washington, D.C.'s George Washington University last month joined more than 850 U.S. colleges and universities that no longer require applicants to take the SAT or ACT, tests that have been a feature of American student life for decades.

Proponents of making the tests optional say the switch can help schools become more diverse and admit students who will thrive even though they may have lagged other applicants on scores.

"It was really about making sure that the right students, students for whom GW would be a great place, were not discouraged from applying," said Karen Stroud Felton, George Washington's dean of admissions.

The test-optional trend has accelerated in recent years, with more than two dozen schools dropping the requirement since the spring of 2014, according to the National Center for Fair and Open Testing, which advocates for test-optional admissions. They include Wisconsin's Beloit College and Temple University in Philadelphia.

But defenders of the SAT and ACT tests of math, reading and writing say they level the playing field for applicants and provide an objective measure for scholarships.

Cyndie Schmeiser, chief of assessment at the College Board, the nonprofit that administers the SAT, said research had repeatedly shown it was a strong predictor of academic success.

The SAT is relied upon by thousands of U.S. colleges and universities. It also gives low-income and minority students access to higher education by stripping out subjective factors such as grade inflation, she said.

About 1.7 million students took the SAT in 2014, up almost 60 percent in 20 years, and 1.8 million took the ACT, according to College Board and ACT numbers. REUTERS

New sports report. IAAF suppressed study of admitted dope cheats

Germany pole vaulter Anna Battke, with a "stop doping" message written on her body / GETTY IMAGES

World athletics' governing body, the IAAF, has suppressed a 2011 survey that reveals that up to a third of the world's top competitors admitted using banned performance-enhancing techniques, Britain's Sunday Times and German broadcaster ARD/WDR reported.

The authors of the study, which involved interviews with 1,800 athletes at the 2011 world championships in South Korea, were told to sign a confidentiality agreement a month after the information had been collected and analyzed, the newspaper said.

The revelations are the latest in a series of damaging blows for the sport in the countdown to the start of this year's world championships in Beijing on Aug. 22.

Earlier investigations by ARD and the Sunday Times prompted claims that more than 800 athletes tested between 2001 and 2012 had suspicious test results that were not followed up by the IAAF.

The IAAF has since initiated disciplinary action against 28 athletes after retesting samples from the 2005 and 2007 world championships with new technology that can uncover previously undetectable substances.

The organization came

Quoted

"The IAAF's delaying publication for so long without good reason is a serious encroachment on the freedom of publication."

The researchers said in a statement under heavy fire from the authors of the 2011 study, which was conducted by researchers at the University of Tuebingen in Germany and leaked to The Sunday Times and ARD/WDR.

The statement added that the IAAF had not commissioned the survey but had used its influence to suppress the findings.

Reacting to the latest accusations in a statement, the IAAF said it "had never vetoed" publication of the survey and understood it had twice been rejected for publication in a scientific journal.

It also questioned the validity of the research.

"The IAAF does, however, have serious reservations as to the interpretation of the results made by the research group as confirmed by high-profile experts in social science who reviewed the publication on our request," it said. REUTERS

Meek Mill doesn't want any more drama.

Our long national nightmare was almost over, as Meek Mill revealed briefly his desire to put this whole business with Drake behind him. The rapper posted a lengthy call for peace in an Instagram comment, but then quickly deleted it. But this is the Internet, so naturally someone caught a screen grab before it was lost forever. So what did Meek Mill have to say for himself?

A lot, as it turns out. But most importantly: "I'm not entertaining no rap/real beef over Drake," he wrote. "I don't feel like I gotta try to prove myself to the people and end up in a real situation over this fake rap s—. ... All this killer s— on social media is like walking ya self into prison and that ain't my lifestyle and don't really make sense to me." So ... there you have it? I guess?

soul-searching. I've talked to Stefano [Gabbana] a lot about this. I've realized that my words were inappropriate, and I apologize. They are just kids. You don't need labels, baby labels." OK, maybe all really is forgiven, if only because he's introduced us to the phrase "baby labels." Could that be a hint of things to come from D&G?

Ben Affleck hits Harry Potter World for his birthday

Ben Affleck turned 43 over the weekend, and how did he celebrate? By linking back up with soon-to-be ex-wife Jennifer Garner to take their three kids to Orlando, Florida, for a visit to Harry Potter World. The whole family has been in Atlanta recently while Garner shoots a movie, so Orlando isn't too far of a trip. The family "was just walking around the park like normal people." Can you imagine? "They looked like they were having a great day together," a source tells E!

News, confirming that Affleck and Garner were "smiling and the kids looked very happy and adorable too."

The destination makes at least corporate sense for Affleck, being that he's currently repping DC Comics and Warner Bros. as Batman in "Batman v. Superman: Dawn of Justice," so obviously couldn't go to Disney World, what with Disney owning Marvel and all. Let's just hope his daughters aren't massive "Frozen" fans.

San Francisco Giants re-create 'Full House' intro

Clearly being a major league baseball team isn't taking up too much of the San Francisco Giants' players' time. The boys put together this remake of the "Full House" opening credits to promote a mysterious "Full House special event" coming at the end of September. And you know what? The results are pretty adorable. But the fact that they could only get a cameo from Dave Coulier at the end is kind of embarrassing, especially since nearly the entire cast is back together for the Netflix reboot. But Coulier making an "Out of Control" reference is appreciated. "Cut it out," indeed.

Gerwig makes Times Square cool

Interview. The actress-writer's latest film is "Desperately Seeking Susan" for the SoulCycle generation.

Not only does Greta Gerwig act in movies by her boyfriend, the filmmaker Noah Baumbach — she writes them with him, too. They wrote their first collaboration, "Frances Ha," over email. Their latest is "Mistress America," which stars Gerwig as Brooke, a mysterious and possibly crazy New York kook who takes a young, inexperienced freshman coed (Lola Kirke) under her wing, with quip-strewn, but less than ideal, results. And as with any script she's worked on, Gerwig — who manages to seem articulate and self-doubting at the same time — feels "like it was made by magic."

In "Mistress America," out Friday, Greta Gerwig plays a character who actually lives and spends time in Times Square, including on those horrid bleachers. / FOX SEARCHLIGHT

Susan" and "After Hours" and "Something Wild." Brooke felt connected to an older New York. Even the fact that she lives in Times Square seemed old-fashioned somehow.

Maybe Times Square is the next cool neighborhood. That's the new neighborhood, I know. I think we're constrained by what Times Square looks like. I was imagining her walking by nudie bars, even though they don't exist now. That's my conception of it. I first came to New York when I was 5. I have all these memories of steam rising from the sidewalk and things seeming shady and dicey. Something about that feeling [is what] we wanted to capture, even though we couldn't literally capture it.

It's interesting to see a portrait of female friendship that is built around idolization. Usually when a woman is being idolized out of proportion, it's by men. Making it between an 18-year-old and a 30-year-old was exciting because when you're 18, you're prone to idolizing people. But you also don't know that you're capable of hurting an adult. Adults seem like static, unhurt people. Even your parents, you can yell at them, but it's a different thing. Teachers seem unhurt. I had the experience at 18 of realizing, "No, you're an agent in the world, and you can really make somebody feel terrible." Which is a hard lesson to learn.

Brooke has this life of odd jobs — including teaching at SoulCycle — that I feel is something that is very NYC right now — although perhaps it's always been that way. Brooke was a character who, to us, felt like she belonged to an older time. To us, it all felt almost reminiscent of the '80s in a way. There were a lot of influences we had — "Desperately Seeking

Owning the screwball market

We should talk about the screwball section of the film.

I have that in me. Part of the reason, I think, is that my first love was theater. I've always felt those movies were closer to theater in some ways. The language is the most important part of the filmmaking — the words are being hurled around, and the meaning is made by the actors in the room together, not in the editing room. Actors are often quite isolated — "this shot, then this shot, then this shot, then this shot." It's more organic and everyone's in the room together. People don't make them anymore. It's something that feels very natural to me, even though it's heightened. It's sort of how I experience things.

Taurus Start a project you've been contemplating. Everyone will eat out of your hand if you present what you are doing colorfully.

Gemini Minor upgrades at home will increase your comfort. Stretching the truth or embellishing the facts will lead to trouble.

Cancer Your reputation is on the rise. Because of your honesty and good judgment, you will be called upon to mediate arguments.

Leo An unexpected bill will throw you off course. Resist the urge to splurge. Think about your future security before you go into debt.

Virgo Take some time for rest. You will feel better if you tie up a few loose ends. Complete projects rather than starting new ones.

Libra A change is on the horizon. Before you take on a new opportunity, make sure you are up for the additional responsibilities.

Scorpio Don't let anxiety or self-doubt prevent you from moving forward. Write down your qualifications and strengths.

Sagittarius Finish what you start. If you are faced with a problem, keep asking questions until you get the information you need.

Capricorn Networking is just as important personally as it is professionally. Interacting with a diverse group of people will be educational.

Aquarius A love connection will confuse you. Go over your papers and bring them up to date. Trouble will surface if you fall behind.

Pisces Do what you can to help others. Your sympathetic nature will be a comfort to those in unfortunate circumstances. EUGENIA LAST

Ignore your email

Email is a great communication tool; it's also incredibly distracting. Let's face it: Not every email needs a response — even fewer need a response ASAP. And if we are constantly fielding messages and requests, then we'll never get that project, article or brilliant strategy think-up. "Deliberately play with not getting your inbox to zero," Crabbe suggests. "Compete with your colleagues about how many unopened emails you have." And leave your phone at home if you find the email alerts distracting.

As for those meeting invites that pop up? Ignore those, too. "How many times do we go to a meeting out of fear? If the meeting doesn't pertain to you, decline. What's the worst that can happen?"

ISTOCK

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Burn your to-do list. The reason we aren't getting ahead in our lives and careers is because we do too darn much.

RAQUELLANERI
@RaquellLaner
raquell.laner@metro.us

Who of us isn't busy? Between constantly responding to emails, attending multiple meetings a day and taking care of our familial and social obligations, it's a wonder we get anything done.

And often we don't! Or, well, we get a ton of small, inconsequential stuff out of the way but barely make a dent when it comes to the projects and goals that really matter.

"Focusing on time management and productivity is actually making our problems worse," says business psychologist Tony Crabbe, author of "Busy: How to Thrive in a World of Too Much." "But all that that does is make people busier, less effective and, quite frankly, less happy."

Stop being so productive!

Crabbe points to a study that found we consume six times as much information than we did in 1986 — but that we produce an astonishing 200 times more.

"So you think, 'Wait a minute. I'm producing 200 times more, and everyone else is consuming six times more.' That's just a ton of white noise nobody is paying attention to," he says.

His solution? Stop doing so much! But, how can we cut back on our workload without, well, getting fired? Crabbe gives us some guidance.

Surf your workload

When confronted with a ton of responsibilities, many of us respond by organizing every aspect of our day so we can squeeze in as much work as possible.

"People think, if they can get in control of their time, things will be OK, but that's unhelpful," says Crabbe.

Think of a surfer. "The surfer doesn't try to control the sea — or catch every wave," he says. "Surfers succeed by choosing the right waves, taking risks and completely immersing themselves in the moment. They master the wave."

So instead of trying to control every aspect of your life in an attempt to get everything done, pick the most important things and give those your all. Even if that means sacrificing a few of the smaller tasks, the risk will yield greater rewards.

Tear up your to-do list

To-do lists? Totally useless. In fact, these scraps of paper only aid us in completing mostly meaningless tasks. "A to-do list has 20 to 30 things that are not important enough to remember otherwise, which is why we have to put them on a to-do list," scoffs Crabbe. "You don't put the stuff that's going to change your life. You could argue that the very act of doing to-do lists drives your attention away from the stuff that's really important." Crabbe says that he would have never put "write a book" or "spend time with my family" on a to-do list.

Always have a 'because'

It takes cajones to skip a meeting or ignore an email from a client because you are busy creating. But if you offer concrete reasons for why you have shirked or put off certain activities, people might just respect you. "I had a client get upset that I wasn't responding to his emails right away," says Crabbe. "So I called him up and said, 'Look, I only look at emails once or twice a day to allow me to focus and create. Otherwise, I can't get anything done.' And you know, he went from being slightly irritated to inspired."

NO WAY THE NFL BEATS BRADY IN A COURT OF LAW

Tom Brady hasn't won Deflategate yet. But last week in a New York City federal courtroom, he and the NFLPA certainly took a late-fourth-quarter lead.

Now that one settlement hearing between Brady and NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell is in the books, the second is scheduled for this coming Wednesday. That too will be overseen by U.S. District Judge Richard Berman, who continues to encourage both sides to agree on a settlement for Brady's four-game suspension, which was upheld by Goodell on July 28.

Entering last week's hearing, the expectation was that Judge Berman would play devil's advocate with lawyers for both the NFL and NFLPA in an attempt to talk each side into backing off their demands and meeting in the middle, so that everyone involved can move on with their lives. But, a funny thing happened as Berman began to grill NFL lawyer Daniel Nash. Berman exposed the NFL for the Wells Report findings, getting the league's own lawyer to admit that it lacks some much-needed "direct evidence" to hold up in a court of law.

While being pressed by Berman to provide proof that implicates Brady in the conspiracy to deflate footballs prior to the AFC Championship, Nash admitted there's no text message that shows Brady instructed someone to put a needle in a football.

Berman attacked the

@DANNYPICARD

"The Danny Picard Show" airs every weekday at DannyPicard.com. Danny can also be heard on WEEI 93.7 FM and seen on CSNNE.

Wells Report, telling Nash that he's "having trouble" finding the "direct evidence of a scheme or conspiracy" that involves Brady and that one game.

In a perfect world for the NFL, Nash would have provided that direct evidence. However, in the world of Deflategate, there is no such direct evidence to provide. It doesn't exist.

It became clear last week that this is no longer about theories or assumptions, or being "more probable than not" or "at least generally aware." Deflategate is now about what can and cannot hold weight in a court of law. Nothing else matters. That's why Brady's lawyers and the

Patriots fans were plenty vocal last Thursday night during the Patriots' first preseason game of 2015, a 22-11 loss to Green Bay. / GETTY IMAGES

NFLPA have advised him to keep fighting.

Whether you believe Brady or not, the fact is, once you enter that courtroom you're innocent until proven guilty. Not the other way around.

So when it came time to simply show a judge some direct evidence to prove Brady guilty, the NFL realized that it had to come up with something a little bit stronger than just spewing the words "integrity of the league" or "protect the shield." But that was impossible to do, because they have nothing.

Heck, Berman even rejected the notion that deflated footballs would give Brady a "competitive advantage" by pointing out that, in the second half of the AFC Championship game, Brady played even better than he did with the "underinflated" balls the league has accused him of using in the first half.

While reminding yourself that Berman's role was to play devil's advocate, the responses he was later able to get from Brady's attorney, Jeffrey Kessler, were much less newsworthy. Mainly because it was more of what we've already heard about Brady's phone and his "lack of cooperation."

To hear an NFL lawyer tell the judge he has no direct evidence that Brady instructed someone to deflate a football is a confirmation that the NFL cannot win this battle in a court of law.

So with one more settlement hearing remaining, and a four-game suspension still officially standing, Brady hasn't won Deflategate yet.

But after last week, it's more clear than ever before that time is running out on Goodell.

MLB. With Farrell out, Sox add to coaching staff

With John Farrell sidelined for the remainder of 2015 as he undergoes chemotherapy treatment for Stage 1 lymphoma, the Red Sox have added to their coaching staff. Torey Lovullo will serve as manager for the rest of the year while Dana LeVangie will move from bullpen coach to bench coach. The Sox also promoted Bob Kipper from Pawtucket's pitching coach to the bullpen coach with the big club. MATT BURKE

Sox rally but fall to M's in extras

The Red Sox rallied from an 0-7 hole Sunday against the Mariners at Fenway Park, but Seattle ultimately prevailed in 12 innings, winning, 10-8. Travis Shaw's RBI single in the ninth inning got the Sox into extra innings, but RBI singles by Kyle Seager and Mike Zunino got the M's the win in the 12th. The Sox host the Indians for three games starting today. MATT BURKE

NFL. Pats players ejected from practice due to fight

Two relatively new Patriots were ejected from the team's Saturday practice for fighting. On a humid day in Foxboro, Pats rookie defensive tackle Malcom Brown and newly acquired guard Ryan Groy reportedly exchanged blows following a play from scrimmage. Groy, in his second year in the NFL, was traded from the Bears to New England earlier this month. MATT BURKE

Deflategate drama

The latest Deflategate drama surrounded two members of the media as The Boston Globe's Ben Volin and prominent journalist Matt Taibbi got into it on Twitter Sunday. Volin wrote in his Sunday notes column, "One owner [not based in Indianapolis or Baltimore] told me last week at the owners meetings in Chicago that he supported Roger Goodell's conclusions and the NFL's efforts in punishing Brady and the Patriots. 'Not all of the facts are out there,' the owner said. 'We don't even know how long this has been going on.'" Taibbi tweeted out Sunday, "The column by @BenVolin today is a new low." Volin responded by saying, "I think there are many things that Ted Wells left out of his report and the NFL isn't mentioning, on all sides, not just Brady."

Bradley Jr.'s stock rises sharply

This past week belonged to Jackie Bradley Jr.

The Red Sox outfielder has been on a tear at the plate, raising his average 129 points. It was highlighted by a 5-for-6, two homer, three double performance in Saturday's 22-10 win over the Mariners.

It was the first-ever five-extra-base hit game in Red Sox history. Bradley Jr. was very calm after the game, especially for someone who just made history.

"It was a good day," he said. "I had a couple nice hits and hopefully I can keep it going."

Acting manager Torey Lovullo expanded on what Bradley Jr. has been able to do of late.

"First of all, I want to say we're all so proud of Jackie for what he's been doing over the past several games," he said. "He's been grinding as we all know, and he has completely turned himself around and deserves all the credit. We ask a lot of him. He's up and down. But he's come up this last time ready to play."

"We get to see the look on his face when he comes in the dugout. He's telling he feels good about what's going on."

Jackie Bradley Jr. has been on a tear as of late. / GETTY IMAGES

Going into play Sunday, he was on a five-game hit streak, batting .591, slugging 1.364 with 13 RBIs, three home runs and nine extra-base hits.

At the start of last week, Bradley Jr. was batting just .121 in 24 games. Now, he's up to .250. It's not like he hasn't performed in Triple-A, as he was named to the International League All-Star team and slashing .305/.382/.472, but he just couldn't get anything going in limited major league opportunities.

What's been the biggest difference this past week?

"Actually getting the results," Bradley Jr. said. "Hitting balls hard and having something to show for it. As cliché as it sounds, when you hit the ball hard, you want something to show for it. It's finally showing."

Bradley Jr. has put himself in a position to be considered for the Red Sox outfield plans in 2016. With the team stressing defense, an outfield of Bradley Jr., Mookie Betts and Rusney Castillo would be one of the best outfields in baseball. Regardless, Bradley Jr. is no longer being viewed as a "throw-in" in a potential trade, rather a player the team is trying to find a role for. RYAN HANNABLE
